

Chidley Educational Centre

1976 – 1998

Details

The Chidley Educational Centre was established in 1976 by the Education Department of Western Australia in Mosman Park as a result of advocacy by the Isolated Country Parents' Association. It was a short-term (six month) residential program for children from country areas who needed specialist learning support. In 1979, there were up to forty children aged between 6 and 13 years at Chidley. Chidley closed in 1998 and the building is now part of the St Hilda's Anglican School for Girls.

In February 2013, a former Chidley student got in touch with Find & Connect to pass on memories which included: regular trips to the beaches, walks along the sand bar and around the river, playing in the tunnels at the Leighton Battery, going to motor cross and go-kart events, and skateboarding. The school gave a lot of encouragement of students to teach each other how to operate and setup equipment including computers and audio visual equipment. Students would receive a certificate to show they had 'qualified' in these and other competencies. With a career still based around skills acquired at Chidley, this former student believes the school played a useful role in young people's development.

Chidley Education Centre

The Chidley Education Centre is Thomas Park and serves to attract and offer young adults to Chidley's village school for girls.

Chidley moved in 1975 to provide internal support and accommodation for general and medical care and to provide a place for the school to move.

It was closed in 1980 when, after extensive consultation with the National Cancer Centre Management, Chidley moved to provide services to the school, medical, and to the hospital, and to the school's management.

The Chidley Education Centre made Chidley available to the school in 1980 after a long period of time of the school building facilities.
